Court Dismisses Bungie's Copyright Claims Against Cheat Seller AimJunkies, For Now

April 28, 2022 by Ernesto Van der Sar

HOME > LAWSUITS > APPS AND SITES >

A federal court in Seattle has dismissed Bungie's copyright infringement claims against cheat seller AimJunkies.com. While it's not disputed that 'Destiny 2 Hacks' were offered for sale, the court is not convinced that these are copyright infringing. The trademark claims are intact, however, so the case is far from resolved.

Over the past several years a wave of copyright infringement lawsuits has targeted alleged cheaters and cheat makers.

Several game companies including Take-Two Interactive and Epic Games, have taken cheaters to court. More recently, American video game developer Bungie joined in on the action.

Bungie is known for the Halo and Destiny series, which have millions of fans around the world. The popularity of these games also attracts cheaters, including those who used the 'Destiny 2 Hacks' suite that was offered for sale at AimJunkies.com.

Bungie Sued AimJunkies

In a complaint filed at a Seattle federal court last June, Bungie accused AimJunkies.com of copyright and trademark infringement, among other things. The same accusations were also made against Phoenix Digital Group, the alleged creators of the software.

Initially, the parties entered settlement discussions. AimJunkies has already removed the Destiny 2 cheats from its site and was willing to negotiate. However, when Bungie moved for a default judgment, reportedly without prior warning, tensions rose.

Earlier this year, AimJunkies hit back with a motion to dismiss. According to the cheat seller, no law prohibits cheating. In addition, the company denied Bungie's copyright infringement allegations.

Among other things, AimJunkies countered that Bungie's allegations are vague and not specific enough to allege a plausible claim. The cheat software itself certainly isn't a copy of Bungie's work, they argued.

Bungie also accused AimJunkies of a variety of other wrongdoings, including breach of contract, tortious interference, and unjust enrichment.

These claims don't belong in federal court either, according to the cheat maker, since Bungie's own License Agreement (LSLA) prescribes that, aside from copyright and trademark issues, all disputes should be resolved by mandatory arbitration.

Court Dismisses Copyright Claims

now ruled on the matter. Judge Zilly dismisses the copyright claims as Bungie failed to show that AimJunkies copied its work.

"Notably, Bungie has not pleaded any facts explaining how the cheat software constitutes an unauthorized copy of any of the copyrighted works identified in the complaint. Bungie's complaint must contain more than a 'formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action,'" Judge Zilly writes.

The court does leave room for Bungie to fix this issue in an amended complaint, but for now, it's dismissed.

1 Bungie, however, has not pleaded sufficient facts to plausibly allege that Aimjunkies and
 2 Phoenix Digital copied constituent elements of Bungie's work. Bungie relies on 3 conclusory allegations that the "cheat software infringes Bungie's Destiny Copyrights by 4 copying, producing, preparing unauthorized derivative works from, distributing and/or 5 displaying Destiny 2 publicly all without Bungie's permission," Compl. at ¶ 70, and the 6 "copies, reproductions, derivative works, and/or displays are identical or substantially
 7 similar to the copyrighted works." Id. at ¶ 71. Notably, Bungie has not pleaded any facts
 8 explaining how the cheat software constitutes an unauthorized copy of any of the 9 copyrighted works identified in the complaint. Bungie's complaint must contain more
 10 than a "formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action." See Twombly, 550 U.S.
 11 at 555.

Judge Zilly also agrees to refer the non-copyright and trademark-related claims to arbitration, as AimJunkies requested. This is in line with Bungie's own license agreement and both parties are encouraged to resolve these issues outside of court.

Not Over Yet

Not all of Bungie's claims were dismissed or referred. Judge Zilly concludes that Bungie's trademark infringement accusations are sufficiently pled, which means that the case can go ahead based on that allegation. The same is true for the "false origin" claim which is closely related to trademark infringement.

AimJunkies booked an initial victory with the dismissal of the copyright infringement claims but they're not celebrating yet. Bungie can still refile these claims with additional evidence and the trademark accusations remain.

Responding to the order, the cheat seller informed us that it's not commenting on the matter just yet. However, it did stress that they are in the final stages of selling the AimJunkies websites to a Ukrainian group of investors.

Date: Wednesday, May 11, 2022 3:41:17 PM

Phil,

Bungie recently saw an article (<https://torrentfreak.com/court-dismisses-bungies-copyright-claims-against-cheat-seller-aimjunkies-for-now-220528/>) in which it was reported that your clients said that “they are in the final stages of selling the AimJunkies websites to a Ukrainian group of investors.” Bungie is extremely concerned that such a sale will include transfer of the AimJunkies Destiny 2 cheat software, including the source code for the cheat, to an unknown foreign group that is outside any US court’s jurisdiction and against which Bungie might be unable to enforce its intellectual property rights. Bungie is also concerned that such a sale could lead to the destruction or removal of relevant evidence or records related to this case.

No later than May 13, 2022, please confirm (a) whether the sale has been completed and (b) whether your clients have included/will be including the AimJunkies Destiny 2 cheat software in the sale of the AimJunkies websites.

Please note that destruction or deletion of any evidence relevant to this matter could have serious legal consequences. Bungie therefore requests that Defendants take all appropriate steps to preserve any documents or other evidence relating to this matter, whatever the status of the sale of the AimJunkies websites.

Best,

Will

Pete:

My name is David Schaefer I'm being litigated along with my partners as a group by Will Rava @ Perkins Coie. I understand Mr. Rava is a fine young man and very motivated to do right for his client "Yourself". What Mr. Rava does not understand is there is repercussions to what he is doing.

We were served with a cease-and-desist last year for your product. We complied with the order but did not respond to him that it was accomplished. We have ALWAYS every single time we have been served, complied.

Last month we were served with a lawsuit and at that point provided documentation to him we stopped selling the cheat and financials for it. That seems too not be enough for him now. It seems he wants to for lack of better terms push our face in the mud over this. We are not a wealthy company. In fact, we have been upside down for the last 18 mos. and have not drawn a salary. Only making payroll. I have people who support their families here. So, there is no corporate money here to be had or personal monies from us as individuals in a settlement.

It is one thing to ask us to remove your product from our shelves but it is another to attempt to financially destroy us. What he does not comprehend is that we were making game cheats when he was in high school, we are not new to this. We will be producing cheats long after he's gone. All you are going to do by pushing this further is driving us back underground. It is a fool's folly to believe you can end cheating in your games, and you have the mud on your face when you spend the money you're spending on litigation to eventually find out cheaters are still there.

We 100% agree to not sell your product anymore but beyond that we cannot agree to his outrageous terms. We can bend over and take it from him if need be but In doing so it motivates us.

In the old days sites would put the source code on public forums for every 14yo to get and make a hack for your game. Most of the time when they do it they make it a free public cheat accessible to everyone. Imagine players having access to cheats for free? I don't think anyone wants to go back to those days. The net net would be you would have more cheaters in your game then before the crusader came in. Is that what you're looking for in your game?

Please for both of ours benefit call your crusader off.

If you want to talk i would take your call
